JOB OFFERS 2.

Once you have found salary data, look at the data with a eye. Salaries for similar jobs can because of differences in location, size of employer, industry, and years of experience.

Another to keep in mind is that many salary surveys report “average” salaries for that position. Take your level of experience into consideration when looking at these average salaries. People with little or no experience are typically paid lower than the average for that job.

When you for a higher salary, tell them why you are worth the higher figure! Compare your experiences, qualifications, and skills to the job description, and how you what they are looking for. your unique skills, specific accomplishments, and/or the you will help

Be about a job that does not provide benefits such as health and insurance. It is probably wiser to select a lower paying job that provides a solid benefit package over a slightly higher paying job with no benefits. Health insurance and other benefits are very expensive if you have to purchase them on your own. Expenses become even higher if you suddenly need health insurance because of illness or injury but have no
