LESSON

VOCABULARY

weird  saturated  bored  boring  calm  lucky angry  wise  responsible  gentle  desperate  embarrassed

GRAMMAR FOCUS

More About Adjectives
the … the + comparative

We can use the structure ‘the + comparative adjective + clause + the + comparative adjective + clause’ to compare and contrast. The clauses should have a parallel structure. This shows equal decrease or increase of change. For example,

The older he gets, the wiser he becomes.
The angrier he is, the more embarrassed he feels.
The more gentle a person seems, the more boring he tends to be.

GRAMMAR FOCUS

Some and Any in Questions

some, any and their compound words

In general, we use ‘any’ to form questions with both countable and uncountable nouns. For example,

Are there any gold in here?
Do you sell any golden pans?

However, we can use ‘some’ in questions in an offer or request and when we expect a positive answer. For example,

Can I borrow some CD’s, please? (request)
Would you like to buy some petrol? (offer)
Are there some lamps we can borrow? (Yes, there are.)

The same rules apply to the compound words formed with some and any except that they should be followed by a noun. For example, any CD’s

some petrol any gold
any golden pans
some lamps

Their compound words such as someone, anyone, something, anything, somewhere, anywhere, somebody and anybody do not. For example,

Is there anyone in the room?
Can someone help her, please?
Are you looking for something impressive for him?
Is there anything I can do for you?
Did you go anywhere today?
Will you drive me somewhere?
Would you ask somebody to turn on the lamp?
Does anybody know where the kettle is?

GRAMMAR FOCUS

More About Adjectives

adjective + to infinitive

There are various structures and reasons to use adjectives with to infinitive. We use to-infinitives with certain adjectives like difficult, easy, possible, impossible, hard, right, wrong, kind, nice, clever, silly and foolish to express opinions. For example,

She is hard to please.
It is impossible to reach the goal in one day.
She was right to get angry.

We can also use to-infinitives with adjectives like happy, glad, pleased, surprised, unhappy, anxious, sad, disappointed and proud after linking verbs to describe how someone feels about an action or to give reasons. For example,

She was pleased to hear from me. (She was pleased because I contacted her.)
I was happy to meet him. (She was happy she was introduced to him.)
The girl is afraid to climb the tree.
He is ashamed to dance.

Lastly, some adjectives are usually used with to-infinitives to indicate the likelihood of an action. Some of these adjectives are likely, unlikely, willing, unwilling, bound, liable, ready, able, apt, due, inclined and prepared.

The movie is likely to end in an hour.
He is bound to tell the truth.
We are due to submit our homework.

GRAMMAR FOCUS

More About Adjectives

compound adjective

We can join two or more words together to modify the same noun and create compound adjectives. For example,

They made a last-minute proposal.
Buying a house is a long-lasting investment.

There are many combinations of words to form a compound adjective. When we use a number + a time period or any other word, the words are hyphenated to create a compound adjective. Also, we write the number in word, not in numerical form. For example,

It is a two-decade tradition.
We made a ten-page research paper.

Other examples of compound adjectives are:

My sister has a part-time job.
The child murderer is a cold-blooded monster.
The whole nation seemed to be open-minded.

However, adverb and adjective DO NOT create a compound adjective as adverb functions as adjective modifier.

There was an extremely disastrous election campaign. --- not a compound adjective

Note: Some other compound adjectives are hyphenated.
